30 Yr...I'm leaving this chart in because with roll and a very long day I can't seem to replicate it at the moment. Read below!!!

This is why I've been ranting about everyone having their heads up their behinds looking at the wrong maps this time every qtr!!!

This Silver chart says it all. It's similar to the Bonds but on a different time frame. I will digress in the comment section.

General Comments or Valuable Insight

It's all about using the correct map

You can't mess up a cash currency chart since there are no rollovers. That's why you should only rely on long-term cash charts.

Don't look at bullshit ETF or a Futures chart. There is not enough data and depending the chart type and session; Daily,daily continuation ect ect ect they all look different. I can pull up another active annual silver which shows the 1980 high @ 41.50. Last I saw someone use the Bloomberg data in 2011 they used the wrong high as well.

If I wasn't standing in front of a Reuters terminal ,when Silver hit 50, on the floor of the old CME @ 222 S Riverside Plaza, I would have been looking at the wrong maps for the past 35 years. Some memories even senility can't erase!

Now to my point...

Playing the match game, eyeballing the correct maps, and being aware of the next matrix #'s, which I have in your face ahead of time.

You had three keys for a reversal today.

- 1) Yen hitting an extreme target had me looking.
- 2) Sept 30 trading at the old continuation high.
- 3) Sept Spu hitting the matrix level shy of 2040

In a perfect world it would have hit at the exact same moment but it was close enough.

Play the match game when major levels like this occur.

You just know that it is a high percentage level for a direction to end.

You don't know how far the trade can bounce until it unfolds.
