GBP/USD...weekly..123.17 is the weekly ORH. I'm not convinced this can go anywhere to the upside even if the pattern is fulfilled tomorrow.

GBP/JPY....weekly...you have a better chance of getting rewarded via the cross than being outright Long Pounds.

This is not a signal I would take without seeing confirming price action during Monday's London session.

OIL...(G) Feb Crude expires today.

Crude has been in a brutal range, one I currently have no interest in trading or commenting on.

General Comments or Valuable Insight

Equity Indices are in Bull market. No Kidding!

I'm talking about this tonight to reflect on the Pattern note I put out around 1:45 CDT.

For the Plungers to win in a bull market and begin to see the first inkling that the tide is turning, the Bears have to win late...meaning the last 20-30 Minutes of New York trading.

The Bots like to paint the tape to suck in as many participants (humanoids) that's you, as possible.

My view on the Indices has not changed in weeks.

Until such time as we get a decent correction of at least 40+ points in the S&P's (whether that comes from 50 handles higher or from here, the game will be in individual names.

I put in a couple of Aluminum names that have had big moves.

I'm told that Funds are underweight the Alumina companies, so its worth keeping on your radar screen if we get a descent selloff in these names.
